of central nervous system-derived oligodendrocyte precursor cells. Human embryonic stem cells (hESC) represent a promising source for replacement of damaged neural cells. While most studies focus on neural precursor cells (NPC), the generation of oligodendrocyte precursor cells (OPC) from hESCs is of particular interest as oligodendrocytes (OL) play a pivotal role in myelin sheath formation. Although hESC-derived OL can be cultured in vitro, few studies have focused on characterizing these cells further. In the present study, we examined whether OL progenitor cells (OPC) could be obtained from the central nervous system (CNS) of the early developing human embryo. CNS cells of human early (8- to 9-week) embryo and hiPSCs were cultured for 6-12 days in the presence of three factors, basic fibroblast growth factor (bFGF), platelet-derived growth factor (PDGF), and insulin-like growth factor

2 (IGF2). The isolated cells were characterized by immunocytochemical analyses. Results showed that a fraction of neural cells at E8.5 to E9.5 in the ventricular zone (VZ) co-expressed GFAP, O4, and Sox2, suggesting that they were OPC. In addition, most of the cells stained positively for platelet endothelial cell adhesion molecule-1 (PECAM-1) and neurofilament heavy (NF-H), indicating their neural nature. However, these cells were negative for the mature OL marker, A2B5.

Interestingly, a small fraction of the cells stained positively for O4 in the absence of GFAP. These results demonstrate that a subpopulation of
