This website has a URL of the form One of the five steps used to calculate the hash is the same as the one used in the cracking. The same attack is used to steal the key, which enables the cracker to decrypt the encrypted data. By executing the attack above, the cracker does not get the key (it only gets the data it needs), but he can decrypt the data using the found key. This is similar to stealing the data on a hard drive by repeatedly looking at the data until one find a string of all zeros. The key's value is the same as the value of the password, so it is likely that the keys of the websites are just long versions of the password. For example: the password of the website is "123123". This leads to a value for the key of "123123123123123123123123123123". This is the same as the value of the hash of the website The value is used to generate the hashes for both the websites and the cracker gets the same value of the key. The attacker's mission in the website is to steal the hash of the website. It can be seen as a very basic man-in-the-middle attack.
