Editing Files with Photoshop Photoshop's features enable you to make excellent-quality edits, and many of them enable you to save time by using tools and features that enable you to create and fix images with little or no effort. But don't forget that a great image can be created by creating or modifying hundreds of pixels with Photoshop. Have fun, experiment, and don't worry if you make a mistake. Always save your image before editing, and often, you'll have your hands full with new assets to create. The Photoshop interface can be daunting at first, but in this section I outline the important features and tools that will make your editing job easier. You can find out more about using Photoshop in Book I, Chapter 6. I also offer chapters that feature tips for using Photoshop. Navigating through the Photoshop interface The previous section gives you the basic tips for using Photoshop, but for a user familiar with the application you can probably skip this section. The important features include the following: Window: You're probably most familiar with this window, but what you may not know is that you can also create a window for each project and that you can drag the image from one window to another. Creating a new window for a new project is easy; just press the Windows key on the keyboard and then press N. You can close the current window by pressing the X in the upper-right corner. To find your image, you can just start typing the image name or use the navigation bar at the bottom of the Image Window (and, by the way, there's also a search box — find it in the workspace). And if you don't see the image you want, you can drag the image from another window to the Image Window. Selecting tools and options The Photoshop interface has seven tools in the toolbox. (Well, in Windows and Mac versions, at least.) You can choose from the following tools: Refine Edge and Refine Edge dialog boxes: These dialog boxes are very helpful for making smart selections from surrounding details. Smart Brush: Using this tool, you

In the new video "Ask Boldly," you can get a glimpse of the future. Lean Office Lab has introduced a new series of videos documenting its user experiences on public transportation and its user experience on the city streets. What prompted the video is a new commercial for the brand's Lean Mobile Assistive Bluetooth smartwatch, with the tagline "Ask Boldly." The original ad, which is still online, launched the campaign and featured a simple, yet compelling, shot of the watch itself. In the video, you can see it serves as an urban navigator, a music player, and a compass. "This campaign is about looking at everyday issues and trying to solve them," says Jason Dyer, spokesman for Lean Office Lab, in the video. While the initial campaign offers a wearable device, the shorts are broader in scope than the original ad. The goals are to share the company's vision and enthusiasm for the product and to motivate people to think about the possibilities of the smartwatch as an easy-to-use technological tool. In the future, these shorts will be accompanied by a website, possibly starting next week, where viewers can download the free app. "The app is a direct reflection of Lean Office Lab's approach to its work," says Dyer. "We want the app to help people focus on doing the work they're meant to do and help them find interesting or innovative ways to bring Lean Office Lab into their lives and work. This app will help it to happen." That, at least, will be done with simplicity. "We've taken the idea of cutting a watch to create an affordable product and then added a lot of cool, simple features," says Dyer. "We're not striving to solve a problem we don't have." The price of the product is low enough to make anyone think it would be a useful concept – even for the most ardent commuter or businessperson, who typically also happens to have a smartphone and a notebook. At the same time, the price is high enough for everyone to figure out. "The starting point has to be that we can make it," says Dyer. "And that we're not afraid to walk down the road we've chosen and see if people like
