TeaTimer description: TeaTimer is a simple desktop application that can be used to keep track of time before a certain event takes place.

TeaTimer is a desktop application which is quickly becoming one of the preferred ways to keep track of time before a certain event takes place. This is especially true when you need to perform some rather repetitive task where you might run into some difficulty in carrying out the task. For example, you may need to water your plants before you go on a long trip, or if you need to keep your tea warm on a cold winter night. The application allows you to pick the event that you wish to set the timer for, and once you're done, you can just set the timer on your pc. TeaTimer comes with a few different features. First of all, there is a timer that you can set with different intervals. Next is the alarm that will sound when the time is up, and finally there is a hotkey that will let you launch the application with a keyboard shortcut.

You can set the timer interval from 1 minute to a maximum of 10 minutes. TeaTimer lets you set the time at which your alarm goes off. When it is done, you can see a pop-up message with the information. If you happen to be away from your computer, you can make use of the external speaker that you have. If you press the hotkey, TeaTimer will be launched in the active window. The alarm can be disabled by pressing the mute hotkey, which will make it easier to mute all sounds at once. TeaTimer comes with some nice features such as the ability to use your keyboard to set the time. After you've set the time, you can either drag and drop the event you want to set a timer on, or you can even drag and drop the timer to the event. It can't be said that it will make your life much easier, but it does make the task a lot less complicated. TeaTimer also comes with an internal alarm system that will let
