Q: C++ STL vector modifications of integer I'm trying to modify integer entries in a vector of strings. I'm creating a vector of strings, and setting initial values. I need to set certain integer entries in the vector equal to the number of times I've been presented with a different string. So far I have this: `vector messages (0); messages[0] = "string 0"; messages[1] = "string 1"; messages[2] = "string 2";` However, I need to add something like this: `messages[0] = 1; messages[1] = 1; messages[2] = 1;` Is there an easy way to do this? I know I can use `find()` to see if a string is in the vector, but I want a vector of integer values that multiply according to the string.

A: From your comment I suppose, you need to look for the position that starts with string 2, since you want to increment something that is lower. use `std::adjacent_find` to get the first element that is greater than the second one. `std::distance(messages.begin(), std::find(messages.begin(), messages.end(), "string 2"))` also, if you already have a vector of strings you can use `strcmp`, as suggested in the comments, since you can compare strings using an integer: `std::distance(messages.begin(), std::find(messages.begin(), messages.end(), "string 2"))`

Q: php group_concat attribute php I have a table called 'topic' that has multiple columns. I have an attribute called 'message' that has two columns. Here is what I want to do `$count = "SELECT message, COUNT(*) AS count FROM table GROUP BY topic";` I have tried doing some looping but that did not work. How could I achieve this? I am a beginner.

Exotic passes, single tuck, double tuck, lob, reverse and lob are also now part of the arsenal. And with signature moves, free kicks, and set plays, there are more ways to score.
- Master the midfielder and attack mid position. Your most versatile role on the pitch, midfielders can help advance the ball, work in tight spaces, and dash into position for long-range shots.
- Choose how you cross. A tweaked strike AI - resulting in more goal and less fluke - will take players' accuracy to the next level. Set plays are now available from more advanced midfielders. And sweeping crosses and flicks dominate the new Custom Crosses, which allows you to create custom-made headers and faked cross loops.
- Pick your line. Work with your strikers to create space. Set up passing options to lead your passes. Or drift outside and blaze a shot on goal. With more movement options available in midfield - play across the lines with inverted wingers and fullbacks, or prefer a floating No. 9 and a free-roaming wide midfielder.

- Beautify the box. The new control scheme and adjustable camera angles deliver an authentic viewing experience. And there are now more camera angles - and a choice of both high and low shot views - to suit your style of play. Also, those who prefer single-stick controls can switch to them with a flick of the new Right Stick.
