Two years ago, I was an undecided, probably Democrat voter. I was attending St. Leo University in the beginning stages of my Catholic studies, but I was getting tired of the political messages being shoved down my throat and trying to find other ways to make some sense out of the world. My first introduction to the conservative movement was when I was given a copy of Dave Ramsey's "The Total Money Makeover." I was immediately impressed by Ramsey's straightforward presentation of his principles and his logic. I decided to dive in and do some research of my own, and thankfully, I found a number of other sites that convinced me there was a better way, and the truth was out there, just over the mountains and three time zones away. I delved into the archdiocesan Catholic site leoturism.com and was informed that as a Catholic, I could not vote for Obama because he refused to respect the separation of church and state, and yet, two years later, there was still a presidential candidate that lacked this crucial principle. The Obama campaign held no major debates before the Iowa caucus, and while Sean Hannity and Rush Limbaugh ballyhooed how a "black" man could be elected, my church leaders did little to inform us of the fact that Obama's Father, an ardent member of the Muslim faith, accepted Jesus at his baptism. It was then that I knew I was going to vote for Mitt Romney and that I had found a home for my journey. That journey has been an education in itself, and I've been humbled to discover how much people just like me have been hurt by our present political climate. We need to talk about our personal tragedies, but I believe that "we" need to get off our soapbox. I believe that we are very good at pointing out wrongs. That said, a very dear, dear friend of mine is the most adorable 10-year-old boy I've ever known, and his father is my good friend, Wayne. When Wayne asked me if I would be willing to join them for an open house so he could introduce me to some of his close friends and family, I was immediately excited. When I walked in, I couldn't believe my eyes. There were about 50 kids, most of them in their 20s and 30s, nearly a third of them Hispanic and Latino. There were about four boys and three girls, and they were all dressed up as Native Americans. Our host,
